THE EVENING STAR. WASHIDOTON.

In several cities of the United States the work of abolishing the grade-crossings of steam railroads is proceeding with satisfactory rapidity. For many years there has been promise of track elevation and track depression within the limits of Washington; there have been hearings before congresstonal committees and the District Commissioners; argument has been made by representatives of the various interests involved; surveys have been made; plans drawn and submitted; reports forwarded, and acts of Congress framed and even introduced. And what has come of it all? Some of the busiest thoroughfares are still obstructed by heavy railroad traffic to the public discomfort and detriment, and occasionally a human life is suddenly and unnecessarily brought to sudden conclusion. No one now attempts to defend the existence of grade crossings in large cities. and no one has ever sincerely advocated a continuation of the evil here, but the unanimity of opinion has not been prolific of The Pennsylvania company has deits willingness to so depress its tracks as to satisfy most people, while the Baltimore and Ohio management pledged itself to run its trains in on a solid masonry viaduct of the most approved descrip-With the appearance of childlike frankness the agents of the corporations named discussed the plans and gave assurance of complete willingness to do all that could be expected of them and to do it speedily. More than a year has elapsed since the last chirp was heard. It cannot be said that the conflicting views of citizens were responsible for the marked inactivity. The blame must rest entirely upon the shoulders of those who declared themselves ready to go ahead as soon as Congress should say the word, but who took good care that Congress should not legislate too speedily. Every real American wants the capital of the nation to be a model city, and some day that delightful condition will be a reality, but not until the steam railroad tracks are above or below grade, and that ancient dam-the Long bridge-has been superseded by a modern and graceful structure.

Some of the purely partisan newspapers are comforting themselves with the figures that emanate from the House Committee on Appropriations. They quote Chairman Sayers as authority for the statement that the total appropriations for the fiscal year commencing July 1 will be less by some $32,-500,000 than the appropriations for the current official year-"which shows," says a representative of the class referred to-"what may be done when economy is imperative." Comment is also made to the effect that so much has been provided in each bill as can be spent to advantage within the fiscal year provided for. While that may be true as to some of the bills reported, it is not true as to the bill making appropriations for the District of Columbia. In that measure, as it now is, there is evidence of a desire to prevent the people of the District from receiving any of the advantages which should accrue from the increased taxation wrought by the last assessment. Many much-needed public works are completely neglected, and there is Congressional unconcern of the inexcusable sort as to projected improvements for get an old-rose pencil."

That was not an unreasonable bill reported yesterday by the House committee on the judiciary. It clothes the Postmaster General with authority to reinstate, whenever a vacancy takes place and without examination by the civil service commission, any person who was dismissed from the railway mail service and any person who was serving as a probationary cierk and hose appointment was allowed to expire by ifmitation, through no delinquency or misconduct of his own, between March 1 and May 15, 1891, or who was dismissed from the service after the last named date upon any order made prior thereto. Just before President Harrison extended the civil service rules to the railway mail service much injustice was done by the dismissal of clerks who were democrats, and it is to remedy the evil thus done by partisanship that the bill in question is favorably reported. The measure needs no apology and should become law.

Senator Jones of Arkansas may not have as much technical information about tariff matters as some of the other members of the most august of legislative boiles. but he has the long end of the argument when he favors and advocates an increase of the tax on beer. The imposition of an additional dollar of duty on each barrel of malt liquor would result in a revenue increase of not less than $32,000,000 without any increase in the cost of collection. The cost of beer to the consumer could not be but the one-fifth of a cent per glass. Dividing the extra dollar between the brewer and the retailer there would be no injustice done, for the retailer makes more than one hundred per cent on his goods and up to the present time none of the brewers have shown any indications of poverty.

The administration should be, and doubtless is, extremely proud of the unanimous and enthusiastic support accorded it in the House yesterday by those who are members of the democratic party. In spite of every effort of the government "whips" it was impossible to secure a voting quorum, although there was a democratic quorum in the House and its immediate vicinity all the day long. Of course, such a condition cannot long continue. The pressure operated by the forces that control patronage is too great for the average Congressman to withstand, so that one by one all but the most strenuously conscientious in opposition to the administration's un-American Hawaiian policy will be gathered in and compelled to submit to the counting process.

When such an important matter as a change in the rules of base ball is definitely and promptly acted upon it must seem strange to the sporting element of society that the tariff question should take so

Since the completion of the marvelous "White City" at Chicago there has been aroused in this country a strong and proper sentiment which demands improvement in government architecture, and although official effort has been made to silence the utterers of that which in the Treasury Department is regarded as heresy the topic insists on being fully and fairly discussed. Sweeping condemnation of government architecture is unfair and is not indulged in even by those who would see it improved as it surely ought to be, but there are many and solidly-based protests against the multiplication of such structures as dot this country and represent the nation's greatness so far as such representation is possible to a building. Last year Congress legislated liberally on this subject. It conferred upon that which forbade the payment of any competing architect except the one whose plans were accepted, but this obstacle was practically removed when the American Institute of Architects averred that its members would compete under the restrictive terms of the act. The law, however, has been permitted to rust. It was not mandatory, and when the Secretary of the Treasury referred it to the supervising architect. that official-who was practically a competitor-laid it away on a top shelf and permitted dust to hide the title, while he nullified the provisions. There are reasons why such action should be taken. The supervising architect has a large force under his control, and, although very many of the employes are so because of their skill, others have no claim whatever upon the public ser vice unless it he admitted that devotion to partisan politics constitutes a reason why a government appointment should follow. Such an innovation as that planned in the shelved act of Congress might result in the removal of a few political barnacles. Is the national artistic sense to be outraged that these politically faithful but frequently inefficient ones may be saved? Centuries of oppression have produced their logical result. From the beginning of earth's history woman has been imposed upon and in a general way has been compelled to subordination. There are a few notable exceptions to this unfortunate and unjust condition of affairs, but they are visible only when the waves of male su premacy are comparatively still and the tide is at low ebb. Out in the West Division High School of Chicago, though, the girls are in a decided majority, so they are celebrating their emancipation in a fashion far from extraordinary when the long period of ensiavement is taken into consideration. Heretofore the boys of the senior class have controlled the graduation program, but the scepter has slipped from their grasp, as it were, and is held by a feminine fist. The girls are in control, have given every place on the program for the coming graduation to their own sex and defy the boys to disturb the carefully-arranged conditions. And all the poor ousted ones can do is to threaten to be lovingly attentive only to the girls in the junior class, and to studiously ignore the existence of the senior tyrants.

The Lodge News, devoted to the interests of the secret orders of the United States, is a new monthly local publication which has just made its initial appearance. Mr. Charles L. Moore is its manager. The first number gives promise of much interesting information and financial success.

Time and Grade Crossings.

From the Philadelphia Press.

In considering the grade crossing question the point on which the most stress is laid is the danger of death and injury from these traps. This is, undoubtedly, the chief reason why such crossings should be abolished as soon as possible, not only in cities, but in the country also. When Chicago shows 431 deaths at the grade crossings within its corporate limits in the year 1893, it is certainly time that something was done to stop the slaughter. The death rate may not be so large in other cities in recommendation. may not be so large in other cities in pro-portion to the number of inhabitants, but it is large enough to make a change imperative

But there is another reason why grade crossings should be abolished, and that is the loss of time they occasion to pedestrians, horse-car riders and vehicles. This is an item rarely taken into consideration, but a little inquiry shows it to be an im-portant one. At a recent discussion of the grade crossing question in Chicago one of the speakers gave the result of his observations as to the delay these crossings caused. He found that by watching at several crossings for three hours that he could construct the following table: Number of vehicles crossing..... Number of street cars.....

Number of passengers in street cars. Number of pedestrians.... Delays ... Total minutes delayed..... Vehicles delayed.....

doubtedly, afflicted to a greater degree with grade crossings than any other city, and the loss is proportionately larger there. But in every city where these death traps and time killers are allowed there is a large. loss of time involved. This loss, if calcu-lated in dollars and cents, would, in a few years, pay for the abolition of every one of these crossings. In this hurried modern life every element counts. The man who can be prompt at work, at business and in meeting engage-ments is the man who wins confidence and clients. There is no greater enemy of promptness than grade crossings, and if they had never been the cause of the death of a single person they ought to be abolish-ed because they are murderers of valuable
